Australian Geographer was founded in 1928 and is the nation's oldest geographical journal. It is a high standard, refereed general geography journal covering all aspects of the discipline, both human and physical.

While papers concerning any aspect of geography are considered for publication, the journal focuses primarily on two areas of research:

- Australia and its world region, including developments, issues and policies in Australia, the western Pacific, the Indian Ocean, Asia and Antarctica.
- Environmental studies, particularly the biophysical environment and human interaction with it.

Papers dealing with international issues, or with nations other than Australia and those within its region, must have an Australian, Asian or Pacific perspective or deal with implications for Australia or its neighbours. Papers addressing theoretical and philosophical issues in geography are also sought. Preference will be given to papers which have a broad appeal to geographers, geography educators and people in cognate areas including Australian studies and environmental studies. Consideration will also be given to shorter papers and notes on topical issues of geographical interest that fall within the areas listed above.

Manuscripts, normally with a maximum length of 7000 words (shorter contributions are particularly welcome) should be sent to the Editor of Australian Geographer: Prof John Connell, School of Geosciences, The University of Sydney, NSW 2006,
