

Call for Papers

Community, Work & Family

Special Issue on Technology and Community

Editor:

Dr Asiya Siddiquee,
Manchester Metropolitan University, UK

Technology has permeated all aspects of social life and has steadily transformed the way in which we live. The notion of community in particular has been affected, as technology demonstrates the potential to influence how community is actualised, experienced and maintained.

This special issue calls for papers which explore the diverse manner in which technology is impacting on community and/or the interface between community and work and family. In this instance, community can refer to a geographical location, a virtual community or a psychological experience (e.g. sense of community).

This call for papers invites reports of original research, reviews of research and discussion articles from colleagues working in the area.

For further details about the format for papers please refer to the Community, Work & Family notes for contributors at <http://www.tandf.co.uk/journals/authors/ccwfauth.asp>.

Articles must be submitted by email to cwf@mmu.ac.uk by the 18th December 2009 and must be clearly labelled "Special Issue: Community and Technology".

Any further queries about the special issue can be directed to Asiya Siddiquee at A.Siddiquee@mmu.ac.uk