Call for Papers

Contemporary British History is currently soliciting manuscripts and review articles on all aspects of British history since the First World War. The journal aims for the highest standards. All submitted material is subject to a process of assessment and evaluation through the Editors and through peer review.

The journal has a long-established reputation in the fields of political and diplomatic history. In recent years it has broadened its horizons to encompass cultural, social, imperial and economic themes (see for example the recent special issue on 'Affluence'). The Editors welcome contributions from non-historians (political scientists, sociologists, etc). They are also keen to receive submissions whose focus is regional/local rather than just national, providing the work in question is attuned to broader debates and controversies in British history (for example the journal is emerging as a leading forum for debate on the 'troubles' in Northern Ireland).

The editors particularly welcome submissions from scholars based outside of the United Kingdom.

Full instructions for authors and details about how to submit your article can be found on the Contemporary British History website: www.tandf.co.uk/journals/fcbh
