Call for Papers A Special Issue on Gender and International Migration

Guest Editors

Lourdes Benería, Carmen Diana Deere, and Naila Kabeer

From the last decades of the 20th century to the present, globalization and the spread of neoliberal policies across countries have resulted in an unprecedented rise in the asymmetrical mobility between capital and labor. International migration has become a topic of intense political debate due to, among other factors, the tension between the increase in the numbers of international migrants and the obstacles faced by them to enter and settle where they choose to work and live. These tensions have raised important issues – economic, social, cultural, and political — that require a gender perspective.

This special issue of Feminist Economics intends to motivate both research and action, generating a discussion on the ways in which gender is an important dimension from which general and specific migration issues can be analyzed. We expect theoretical contributions as well as empirical analyses. The following themes are of particular interest:

- Rethinking theory on labor and capital mobility
- Periodization of migration and its feminization processes
- The care economy, women, and migration
- The globalization of reproduction and transnational mothering
- What happens to the children left behind?
- Remittances and development: the role of women
- Migration and “the nomad worker”
- Poverty and migration
- The challenges of social protection for migrant workers
- Internal versus international migration
- Engendering national/regional immigration policy and political debates

Deadline for abstracts: 15 September 2009. Papers will be due in May 2010. Please direct queries and abstracts (500 words maximum) to guest editors Lourdes Benería (lb21@cornell.edu) and Naila Kabeer (N.Kabeer@ids.ac.uk).

Final papers (after approval of abstracts) should be submitted to Feminist Economics through the submissions website (<http://mc.manuscriptcentral.com/rfec>). Questions about these procedures may be sent to feministeconomics@rice.edu, +1.713.348.4083 (phone), or +1.713.348.5495 (fax).

Please note that the annual conference of the International Association for Feminist Economics, being held in Boston, June 26–28, 2009, will have gender and migration as one of its themes. To submit a paper for the conference, go to <http://www.iaffe.org>.
