

Norsk Geografisk Tidsskrift - Norwegian Journal of Geography

The essential journal for Norwegian geographical research: encompasses physical and human geography.

Norsk Geografisk Tidsskrift–Norwegian Journal of Geography, published since 1926, is a continuation of Norsk Geografisk Aarbog (1889–1921) and is associated with the Norwegian Geographical Society.

The editors are:

- Michael Jones (editor-in-chief) – special responsibility for human geography.
- Ivar Berthling – special responsibility for physical geography.
- Anders Lundberg – special responsibility for environmental geography.

The journal reflects the many facets of geography and tries to take an all-round geographical view, both regionally and thematically, by striking an equal balance between physical and human geographical material. The journal aims at presenting geographical research directed towards problems and areas of interest to Norwegian researchers.

Themes related to the geography of Norway, the Nordic countries and adjacent regions, including polar environments, are of special interest, but relevant topics dealing with other parts of the world are included.

In addition, research notes, short articles, including some of special interest for teachers of geography, reviews of Norwegian doctoral theses in geography, and other book reviews are published in a separate section of the journal.

All articles are refereed by two independent reviewers.

All submissions should be made online at the Norsk Geografisk Tidsskrift-Norwegian Journal of Geography Manuscript Central site.
