

Sneak Peak of What's Coming in 2012!
New Articles from Issue 1, Volume 31 of MEDICAL ANTHROPOLOGY

Interested in these Articles?
Our alerts bring brand new content to your fingertips!
Simply click 'Alert Me' on the Journal's main page to choose email alerts or an RSS feed
www.tandfonline.com/GMEA

The Development and Status of Anthropology of Health in Brazil

By Esther Jean Langdon and Maj-Lis Follér

Brazilian anthropological studies of health have developed into an active research program proposing subalternative paradigms that continue to be marginalized in the global discourse of Medical Anthropology.

"Now, I am a proper human being:" Kidney Transplantation in Cyprus

By Costas Constantinou

The socio-cultural and medical context among Greek-Cypriots in Cyprus works as a template of understanding for hemodialysis and kidney transplantation.

Ambivalent Participation: Troubling Desires, Erotic Transgression and Unsafe Sexual Cultures Among Young Marginalized Mozambicans

By Christian Groes-Green

What does it mean to be a participant observer in a sexual culture? In this article, Groes-Green describes how he negotiated structural barriers and mutual desires as he studied the erotic universe of unsafe sex.

Resisting Global AIDS Knowledges: Born-Again Christian Narratives of the Epidemic from Papua New

By Richard Eves

This paper explores the friction between two different ways of understanding the AIDS epidemic: the global AIDS discourse and the fundamentalist born-again Christian discourse.

Social Representations of Human papillomavirus (HPV) in Bogotá, Colombia

By Carolina Wiesner, Adriana Diaz del Castillo, Jesús Acosta, and Sandra Tovar In Colombia, social representations of HPV are not related to levels of education, but mainly to gender differences.