

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Introducing the new Educational Research and Evaluation

Taylor & Francis is pleased to announce the union of Evaluation and Research in Education with Educational Research and Evaluation in 2012. This move brings together two leading journals in the field of Research Methods, with the new Educational Research and Evaluation publishing a wide range of quantitative and qualitative method articles, reviews, meta-analyses and position papers.

Educational Research and Evaluation will be a fully refereed international journal, publishing original academic articles aimed at promoting educational processes and outcomes, both well-informed and evidence-based. It will be deliberately multi-disciplinary and broad in scope, addressing rigorous research and evaluation at all levels, and in all sectors and ages of education.

With a prominent international editorial team, Educational Research and Evaluation will increase to 8 issues per year and provide a combination of the best of both journals, with a wider range of international high-quality articles published.

Graham Hobbs, Taylor & Francis Group's Education Journals Director, said: "The amalgamation of these two reputable titles gives rise to one impressive new resource encompassing the field. The journal is a must-have resource for academics and students alike, providing a complete range of high quality research in one publication. Routledge is privileged to work with some of the world's leading educational researchers and is proud to support a truly international community of scholars, researchers, authors, and editors in education and educational research."
