Rights and Political Regulation of Travel and Tourism Mobility

Volume 2, Issue 2, 2010

Managing Editor

Rhodri Thomas, Leeds Metropolitan University, UK

Despite the declaration of a 'Bill of Rights' of the Tourist by the UNWTO no rights of tourism exist under international law. The UN Declaration of Human Rights for example does not guarantee entry into another country. Therefore issues of tourist 'rights' and the political regulation of travel lie are vital to understanding international tourism policy. This theme issue will examine issues associated with the rights and regulation of tourism mobility including citizenship(s), visas, passports, tariffs, international tourism and governance, including efforts to encourage or control tourism flows. The latter may include discussions on such concerns as government policy, supranational agreements, regulation, taxation and tariffs, social tourism, disability, different understandings of disadvantage, and 'barrier free' tourism.
