

RETHINKING MARXISM

a journal of economics, culture & society

This collection of articles from the journal showcases a variety of approaches to relocating economic subjects, rethinking economic theory and processes, and re-visioning alternative economies. All have been specially selected for their potential appeal to geographers, and represent themes in which the journal has been continuously engaged so that interested readers should find ample material for further investigation. Major themes include: political economy and class analysis (Katherine Gibson, J.K. Gibson-Graham “Dilemmas of Theorizing Class”, Stephen Resnick and Richard Wolff); geography and community economies (J.K. Gibson-Graham “Waiting for the Revolution” and “An Ethics of the Local”); feminist theory (Jenny Cameron); subjectivity and psychoanalysis (Ken Byrne and Stephen Healy, Kenan Erçel); and the common and forms of the commune (Yahya Madra and Ceren Özselçuk, Michael Hardt).
