Manish Sejwal, owner of Anamaya Publishers said, “We are delighted with the co-publishing partnership between Anamaya Publishers and the Taylor & Francis Group, one of the leading publishing brands in the world today.. It marks the beginning of an exciting opportunity for us to present to the global audience highly relevant scholarly work from well-known scientific and professional organisations in India. During recent years, Anamaya Publishers has progressed well in its aim of becoming the leading academic publisher on the Indian subcontinent by publishing and distributing scholarly books and journals with a distinctively Indian focus on behalf of our authors, editors and society partners. We are ideally positioned to take the lead in creating a viable forum for showcasing Indian knowledge to reach a wider, global audience.”

Dr David Green, Global Journals Publishing Director for Taylor & Francis Group said, “This is an extremely exciting co-publishing partnership. Having established a journals editorial operation in our New Delhi office, Taylor & Francis is proud to have entered into a co-publishing partnership with Anamaya Publishers and its society partners. We are able to bring to the partnership global sales and marketing exposure, and a cutting-edge online presence with the informaworld platform. The Anamaya portfolio of journals is committed to quality and excellence in editorial content and publishing standards, so this is a wonderful marriage for all parties.”

The incorporation of these five journals in the Taylor & Francis portfolio brings the total number of journals available to subscribers to 1405 in 2009.

Taylor & Francis Group has 418 journals ranked within the Science and Social Sciences Journal Citation Reports® (JCRs®). In the 2007 JCR, 41 Taylor & Francis Group journals were added.
