

Taylor & Francis Group and China National Knowledge Infrastructure (CNKI) Announce Partnership

Abingdon, 5th August 2009

Taylor & Francis Group are pleased to announce a new agreement with the China Academic Journals Electronic Publishing House and Tongfang Knowledge Network Technology Co., Ltd. to display journal abstract information on the China National Knowledge Infrastructure (CNKI) platform. This will enable researchers to browse the CNKI databases for journal and article information and link through to the full text article hosted on Taylor & Francis' online journal platform informaworld.

Those students and researchers using CNKI's 1,500 plus databases will benefit from viewing abstracts in Chinese and linking through to over 1,370 online peer-reviewed titles from the world renowned Routledge, Psychology Press and Taylor & Francis imprints.

Barry Clarke, Managing Director for Taylor & Francis Asia commented 'We are extremely pleased that our journal content will be available to an even wider network of Chinese researchers via the CNKI platform. Academics will not only be able to access the latest Chinese research but also all cutting-edge papers published in our journals.'

Yan Pei, Senior Manager for Taylor & Francis Academic Publishing based in Beijing added: 'Chinese researchers will reach T&F's rich content as they search the CNKI platform using Chinese or English keywords. Knowledge relevant to their needs will be more accessible and this will enhance their own work. This agreement with CNKI will not only increase T&F's profile in the academic community but will support our many other sales and marketing initiatives in China as well.'
