Taylor & Francis Announces Co-Publishing Agreement with UNISA Press

On Thursday 26th October Taylor & Francis Group announced that from the 2007 subscription year it will be co-publishing with the University of South Africa (UNISA) Press, under its Routledge imprint.

For the first time the following UNISA journals will be available to purchase in print and/or in online only format:

Africa Education Review (formerly Educare)

Communicatio: South African Journal for Communication, Theory & Research

Critical Arts: A Journal of South-North Cultural & Media Studies

English Academy Review (The)

International Journal of African Renaissance Studies

Journal of Literary Studies

Language Matters: Studies in the Languages of Africa

Muziki: Journal of Music Research in Africa

Myth & Symbol

Scrutiny2: Issues in English Studies in Southern Africa

South African Journal of Higher Education

Ms E. H. Le Roux, Director, Unisa Press said “Through its extensive publication of academic journals, UNISA Press is ideally positioned to take the lead in creating a viable forum for African knowledge production. During the past year, UNISA Press has progressed well in its aim of becoming the leading academic publisher on the African continent by publishing and distributing scholarly work with a distinctively African focus. UNISA Press is pleased to announce that it has entered into a partnership with Routledge (Taylor & Francis Group), which would allow the Press’s journals to reach a wider, global audience.”

Dr David Green, Global Journals Publishing Director for Taylor & Francis Group advised “This is an extremely exciting partnership. Having worked with South African colleagues for over a decade, we are delighted to be part of a major step forward in reintegrating African scholarship into the global academic community”.

The inclusion of these 11 journals in the T&F portfolio brings the total number of journals available to subscribers to approximately 970 in 2007. T&F (under the Routledge imprint) added more journals to the Social Sciences Journal Citation Reports® (JCRs®) in 2005 than any other publisher. In total, 18 journals were added, including 4 top 10 titles.
