

Taylor & Francis Africa

*Advancing African Studies and promoting African research in partnership with
learned societies,
academic institutions
and regional co-publishers*

Taylor & Francis publishes leading African Studies journals under its Routledge imprint and is committed to disseminating and showcasing African research in a variety of subject areas, from the arts to zoology, mathematics to music. Since 2007, Taylor & Francis has operated from a regional base in Johannesburg to support and strengthen local academic journals publishing. It works in close collaboration with two partners, UNISA Press and NISC, to co-publish a range of top journals. The African journals programme is fast approaching fifty titles and regional investments include financial returns to public institutions and local publishers, training and capacity building, author workshops, editorial indabas, provision of editorial and production systems, librarian roundtables, on-the-ground publishing support and access to international resources.

Taylor & Francis supports a wide range of philanthropic programmes to promote access to research
